Lollapalooza ticket sales are slooow

Is it lineup or fest fatigue?

BY GREG KOT
Chicago Tribune

Once a Lollapalooza sell-out could be measured in minutes. But that era appears to have passed.

Four-day passes ($340) for Lollapalooza went on sale three weeks ago Tuesday and they're still available, the second year in a row of sluggish sales for the festival, which returns Aug. 1-4 to Grant Park. (Only the $650 four-day GA+ tickets featuring food and bathroom perks have sold out.)

Last year, it took eight days for the fest to sell out its 80,000 four-day passes (daily capacity is 100,000). But weekend passes sold out in less than 2 ½ hours in 2017, and within an hour in 2016. In 2014 and 2015, Lollapalooza sold all of its weekend passes even before the lineups were announced.

In contrast, the Coachella Festival in California remains a brisk seller. It sold out both of its three-day weekends in six hours when tickets went on sale in January, only slightly slower than the three-hour blow-out for tickets in 2017 and 2018.

Last year's slower Lollapalooza sales could be pinned on the relatively stale menu of headliners — seven of the eight had played the festival before. But this year Lollapalooza has a fresher look at the top of the bill and shares some top-billed acts with Coachella, including Ariana Grande, Childish Gambino, Tame Impala, J Balvin and Janelle Monae. Four-day ticket prices ($340) are $5 higher than last year for Lollapalooza, whereas Coachella's three-day passes cost $429.

Executives with C3 Presents, which promotes Lollapalooza with Live Nation, were not immediately available for comment on the sluggish sales.

If history is any indicator, it is extremely rare for a festival to exist — let alone thrive — for a decade-plus. Lollapalooza (which established its annual Grant Park residency in 2005) and Coachella (originated in 1999) are among the North American exceptions. In recent years, a number of long-running festivals have either shrunk (Vans Warped Tour has gone from a national tour to a handful of dates) or struggled to stay viable amid declining attendance (Bonnaroo in Tennessee).

TOM SKILLING'S 3-DAY FORECAST

The record-breaking snowfall Sunday will be followed by higher, but still below normal, temperatures Monday. They will rise through the workweek and may reach 70 by Thursday. While conditions will warm, rain and even thunderstorms may be commonplace Wednesday through Friday.

In addition to the snow on Sunday, active weather was in place through a large portion of the eastern U.S. The start of the final round of the Masters Tournament was moved up Sunday morning in an effort to finish before forecast severe weather Sunday afternoon in Augusta, Ga.

Severe weather was in place over northeast Ohio on Sunday evening as a tornado warning for Erie County alerted of a storm capable of producing a tornado and pingpong-size hail.

Snowfall misses decades-old record by fraction of an inch, warmup coming

BY KATHERINE ROSENBERG-DOUGLAS
Chicago Tribune

The last time it snowed this much so late in spring, John F. Kennedy was president.

O'Hare International Airport's official snow measurement for Sunday came in at 5.3 inches, making it the second-snowiest day on record so late in the season.

The snowiest day on record this late in spring was April 16, 1961, which recorded 5.4 inches. That means the total snowfall Sunday missed breaking the record by one-tenth of an inch.

Forecasters expected the snow to melt on contact with the ground, but so much snow fell in such a short time that that didn't happen, said Casey Sullivan, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service.

"It was always expected to be a strong storm, but the uncertainty was how much would accumulate on the warm ground and the warm pavement," Sullivan said. "In general, I don't think we were expecting 2-3 inch (per hour) snowfall rates."

As Chicagoans began looking forward to a warmup starting Monday morning, the conditions still were causing travel troubles.

The CTA reported a disruption in service on the Blue Line between the O'Hare and Harlem stops because a car slipped onto the tracks near Rosemont about 5:30 a.m. The vehicle has since been removed, but trains were only operating between Harlem and Forest Park until about 7:45 a.m., and the line faced major delays after that. The CTA said buses were available to provide connecting service between Harlem and O'Hare. Check the CTA's website for updated travel information.

A traffic crash involving 11 vehicles led to a shutdown of I-290 westbound at the Byrne Interchange, WGN reported, attributing the crash to slick conditions. Illinois State Police Sgt. Jacqueline Cepeda said no injuries were reported in the crash and that it remained under investigation.

While more than 1,000 flights were canceled at O'Hare on Sunday, the Chicago Department of Aviation was reporting far fewer delayed and canceled flights Monday morning.

As of 11 a.m., 69 departing flights had been canceled at O'Hare and 177 departing flights had been delayed. At Midway Airport, two departures were canceled and 43 departures were delayed, according to the department's website.

Monday will be mostly sunny during the day with a 30 percent chance of showers at night, according to the weather service.

ARMANDO L. SANCHEZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Mason Wohltmann, 7, stands between two snowmen he made with other members of his family in the Lake View neighborhood Saturday.

Temperatures will be in the mid-40s early Tuesday, then peak around 2 p.m. with a high of 63, according to the weather service. It will be cooler by the lake. There's a slight chance of thunderstorms Tuesday night and a 40 percent chance of rain.

On Wednesday there's a 40 percent chance of showers and thunderstorms with a high near 60, according to the weather service.

Although Chicago almost broke a record, it was in northern counties where the snowfall most surprised forecasters and residents alike.

In McHenry County, which borders Wisconsin, a heavy band of snow dumped 6 to 8 inches on portions of the county, with Huntley measuring 7.5 inches. But Fox Lake, which is also in McHenry County, only saw 5.3 inches.

In DeKalb County, the city of DeKalb also had 7.5 inches of snow. Sycamore had 8 inches.

St. Charles may have tallied the most snow, with 8.3 inches measured there. Also to the west, North Aurora had 4.4 inches.

"It is rare to have this big of a snowstorm this late in the season," Sullivan said. "The conditions you need are what we had yesterday: A very strong storm system moving through that is able to produce heavy enough precipitation that the snow on the ground doesn't get a chance to melt because snow is falling right on top of it."

Sullivan said that as the storm gained momentum in the early afternoon, it began dumping about 2 to 3 inches per hour on the region.

"It was just a lot of variables that you need to come together that actually came together," Sullivan said.

As reports of thundersnow came in Sunday afternoon, mainly across the city's southern half and southern suburbs, people took to social media to discuss the phenomenon.

"Basically it's a thunderstorm but instead of rain falling, it's snow falling," Sullivan said. "In general, it's rare, but it's not unheard of."

Sullivan said there is a chance of rain Monday night, about 30 percent. With both a high and low temperature in the low 40s, he said, that system would produce all rain if there is any precipitation. The rain is likely to fall north of Interstate 80, Sullivan said.

A traveler experiences "Circling," a 3-D interactive sculpture at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport's Terminal D on July 23, 2005. The airport may build a sixth terminal, Terminal F.

Look out, O'Hare — DFW Airport planning for another terminal

Associated Press

Talks are expected to begin this spring on adding a sixth passenger terminal at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, the main hub for American Airlines, aviation officials said.

Airport authorities said there's a good chance Terminal F could be built with design standards that allow more airplanes to park in a smaller space, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported.

Terminal F will probably not be the same shape as other terminals at DFW.

Some 60% of DFW passengers are connecting for another flight, and the half-moon terminal design is not the best shape for connecting customers, said

Sean Donohue, DFW Airport chief executive officer.

While the discussions around the construction of Terminal F are still introductory, it's likely the new terminal could be created without a parking garage, officials said, citing data indicating that about a quarter of car traffic at the airport comes from ride-share services such as Lyft and Uber.

"If we can add gates without a lot of the things you typically need for a terminal, that might be really helpful," said Tim Skipworth, American Airlines vice president of airport affairs and facilities.

Donohue said that while no financial projections are available, it's likely the new Terminal F would be the key part of an airport capital improvement project that could cost as much as $4 billion through 2025.

Some temporary enhancements to Terminal C, the airport's busiest terminal and also the only one that hasn't received capital improvements in the past 20 years, would also likely be included in the project.

Those funds are expected to come from airport revenue bonds issued by the airport's owner cities, Dallas and Fort Worth.

The money would be reimbursed from dues paid by airlines who use DFW, chiefly American, which considers DFW its primary global hub and runs about 80% to 85% of all flights there.

Lyft pulls electric bikes off road after brake problems

BY CATHY BUSSEWITZ

Associated Press

Lyft last week got the go-ahead from the Chicago City Council for a $50 million expansion of its Divvy bike-share program, one that will include 10,500 new electric bikes.

But over the weekend, Lyft pulled 3,000 electric bikes from the streets of New York, San Francisco and Washington, D.C., after customers complained the bikes were braking too hard.

A spokeswoman with the ride-hailing company said Monday they are aware of reports of injuries, but wouldn't specify the number of complaints it received. On Twitter, riders complained of being thrown over the handlebars.

Lyft removed the majority of its electric bikes, which can go up to 18 miles per hour, from the three cities on Sunday. Lyft is working with an engineering firm to determine the cause and did not estimate when the electric bikes would be back on the road.

"We recently received a small number of reports from riders who experienced stronger than expected braking force on the front wheel," Lyft wrote in a letter to customers on its bikeshare websites. "Out of an abundance of caution, we are proactively removing the pedal-assist bikes from service for the time being."

The electric bikes in question were designed by Motivate, the largest bike share operator in the U.S., which Lyft bought in November. Motivate operates in New York City as Citi Bike, San Francisco as Ford GoBike and Washington D.C. as Capital Bikeshare.

In San Francisco, which has a higher percentage of electric bikes in its fleet than Lyft's other markets, Lyft is extending monthly and annual bike memberships by a month.

Lyft made its public debut on the stock market in March, but company shares have tumbled far below initial offering price of $72.

On Monday shares slid another 6% to $56.22. That's 36% below the highs reached during the first day of trading late last month.

In Chicago, the Lyft deal will more than double the available bikes and putting new docking stations in every ward by 2021.

Notre Dame Cathedral on fire after spire collapses in Paris

BY LORI HINNANT
Associated Press

Firefighters are battling a massive blaze at the French capital's iconic Notre Dame Cathedral.

The deputy mayor of Paris says Notre Dame Cathedral has suffered "colossal damages" from a fire that started in the spire and caused it to collapse.

Speaking to BFMTV, Deputy Mayor Emmanuel Gregoire said first responders now are trying to salvage the art and other priceless pieces stored in the cathedral.

A cathedral spokesman has said the entire wooden interior of the Notre Dame is burning and likely to be destroyed.

French President Emmanuel Macron tweeted after the blaze broke out in the cathedral's spire on Monday he was sad to see "a part of us being on fire."

He extended "thoughts for all the Catholics and all the French."

His administration says Macron is heading to Notre Dame.

The cathedral is home to incalculable works of art and is one of the world's most famous tourist attractions.

The cause of the blaze was not known.

Paris police said there were no deaths so far and the origin of the fire was unknown. French media quoted the Paris fire brigade saying the fire is "potentially linked" to a $6.8 million renovation project on the church's spire and its 250 tons of lead.

Before fire, $6.8 million renovation project offered a rare glimpse of Notre Dame statues

Flames shot out of the roof behind the nave of the cathedral, among the most visited landmarks in the world. Sights of the flames stopped passers-by in their tracks along the Seine River that passes beneath the cathedral.

A pre-recorded speech from Macron was set to be aired Monday evening, to lay out his long-awaited answers to the yellow vest crisis that has rocked the country since last November. That speech has been postponed.

Associated Press reporters at the scene saw massive plumes of yellow brown smoke filling the air above the Cathedral and ash falling on the island that houses Notre Dame and marks the center of Paris.

Paris Mayor Anne Hidalgo said in a Twitter message that Paris firefighters are still trying to limit the fire and urged Paris citizens to respect the security perimeter.

Redacted Mueller report expected to be released Thurs.

BY MICHAEL BALSAMO
AND JONATHAN LEMIRE
Associated Press

The Justice Department expects to make a redacted version of special counsel Robert Mueller's report on the Russia investigation public Thursday morning, a spokeswoman said Monday.

The redacted report would be sent to Congress and also made available to the public, spokeswoman Kerri Kupec said.

As Washington counted down until the release, President Donald Trump stepped up his attacks in an eleventh-hour effort to undermine the report's findings.

Trump unleashed a series of tweets on Monday — including two just minutes after the Justice Department's announcement — focusing on the favorable topline in the previously released summary produced by Attorney General William Barr.

Mueller officially concluded his investigation late last month and submitted the confidential report to Barr.

Two days later, the attorney general sent Congress a four-page letter that detailed Mueller's "principal conclusions."

In his letter, Barr said the special counsel did not find a criminal conspiracy between Russia and Trump associates during the campaign, but Mueller did not reach a definitive conclusion on whether Trump obstructed justice.

Instead, Mueller presented evidence on both sides of the obstruction question.

Barr said he did not believe the evidence was sufficient to prove that Trump had obstructed justice.

"Mueller, and the A.G. based on Mueller findings (and great intelligence), have already ruled No Collusion, No Obstruction," Trump tweeted. "These were crimes committed by Crooked Hillary, the DNC, Dirty Cops and others! INVESTIGATE THE INVESTIGATORS!"

In his letter, Barr noted that Mueller's team did not exonerate the president of obstruction of justice.

Democrats immediately called for Mueller to testify and for his report to be released.

Trump and his allies are also attacking the origins of the Russia investigation, portraying it as an effort by Democrats and career officials in the Justice Department who wanted to bring down a president.

Ariana Grande had special guests during her Coachella set Sunday night, including '90s boy band 'N Sync.

Grande reunites 'N Sync at Coachella

TMZ spoiled the surprise a few days ago, but the rumor proved true: Pop star Ariana Grande and '90s boy band 'N Sync — minus Justin Timberlake — collaborated to close down the first weekend of Coachella on Sunday night.

As the final performer, Grande — who, at 25, is the youngest artist ever to headline the festival — was under pressure: Not only did she have to live up to the hype, but the final-season premiere of "Game of Thrones" threatened to steal the internet's attention.

Luckily, Grande is one of the biggest pop stars in the world at the moment, so her fans ensured that #ARICHELLA was trending worldwide on Twitter in the lead-up to her set, which was livestreamed on YouTube. Plus, she had quite the list of cameos: Nicki Minaj, Diddy and Mase also joined forces onstage with Grande.

Grande ran through a set list very similar to her current Sweetener World Tour, though the twists started about 15 minutes into the show. In the middle of "Break Up With Your Girlfriend, I'm Bored," she suddenly stopped singing. "Ladies and gentlemen," she announced. "'N Sync!"

In that particular song, Grande samples "It Makes Me Ill," a cut from the band's 2000 album, "No Strings Attached." The audience let loose ear-shattering screams when JC Chasez, Lance Bass, Joey Fatone and Chris Kirkpatrick appeared.

"I've been rehearsing my whole ... life for this moment!" yelled Grande, a longtime fan of the boy band.

London's finest: Joan Collins has thanked firefighters for their quick response after a blaze erupted in her London apartment. The 85-year-old actress shared video images on social media after the weekend fire. She also tweeted thanks to the "marvelous" firefighters who tackled the "terrifying" blaze and said her husband, Percy Gibson, was a "hero" for trying to douse the flames.

Anticipation: Carly Simon is writing an "intimate, vulnerable" memoir about a very famous friend, Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis. According to publisher Farrar, Straus and Giroux, Simon and Onassis met at a summer party and began an "improbable, but lasting friendship." Simon said in a statement that Onassis became everything from a "protective mother figure" to a "mischievous pal."

A Supreme 'no': The Supreme Court is declining to take the case of a Pennsylvania rapper who was convicted of threatening police officers in one of his songs. In 2012, Jamal Knox, aka Mayhem Mal, and rapper Rashee Beasley were arrested on gun and drug charges. A song they later wrote contains phrases including "Let's kill these cops cuz they don't do us no good." Both were charged with terroristic threats. Knox argued that the song was protected by the First Amendment, but he was ultimately convicted and sentenced to one to three years in prison.

"When Calls the Heart" will resume next month without actress Lori Loughlin.

Why Hallmark's 'When Calls the Heart' hasn't been airing

BY RICH HELDENFELS
Tribune News Service

Q: Could you please tell me what happened to the Hallmark Channel series "When Calls the Heart"? I haven't seen any new episodes for several weeks.

A: The frontier drama took a break during its sixth season to deal with the scandal surrounding star Lori Loughlin, who has been among dozens charged in college admission cheating schemes. Loughlin and her husband, Mossimo Giannulli, are accused of spending $500,000 on fraudulent ways to get their two daughters into the University of Southern California. Another actress, Felicity Huffman, also was charged in the case and has said she will plead guilty. As of this writing, Loughlin has not entered a plea and new charges have been added to her original ones.

Shortly after the first charges were announced, Hallmark cut ties with Loughlin and "When Calls" went on hiatus to figure out life without her. (She was also reportedly dropped by the Netflix comedy "Fuller House.") "When Calls" has now set a return, with an episode May 5 and another May 6.

As of this writing, Hall-mark had not addressed what would happen with Loughlin's character. Entertainment Weekly's sources said Loughlin has been completely edited out of the season's remaining episodes, and "some minor reshoots" were made.

Q: Why is Bob Ley never on ESPN's "Outside the Lines with Bob Ley"?

A: In mid-August last year, Ley announced he was going to take a six-month sabbatical "to recharge." He said on Twitter that "the idea of stepping back is fully 100 percent mine, and one I've been considering for a while." His break officially began on Sept. 28. An ESPN representative did not have a specific air date for his return but said it will be sometime this month.

Q: I have been watching every rerun of "Last Man Standing" hoping to catch the episode showing Kristin and Ryan's wedding. Was it ever shown?

A: No. Kristin and Ryan firm up their wedding plans — agreeing to get married in a church — in the final episode of the fourth season. (The show is now in its seventh.) When the fifth season began, several months had passed and the wedding had already taken place.

Q: What happened to the sitcom that went on without Roseanne Barr? John Goodman and other "Roseanne" cast were in it when it aired for a short period of time and then disappeared. I enjoyed it. Will it return?

A: Yes. "The Conners," the continuation of the TV family's story after the firing of Barr, first aired for 11 episodes from October into January. Even minus Barr, the show did well, with ABC calling it TV's most-watched comedy in total viewers and in the advertiser-coveted viewers 18 to 49 years old. As a result, the network has ordered a second season of "The Conners" for this fall. A top ABC executive said the show's team "is fearless in their willingness to tackle contemporary issues with humor and heart, and I have no doubt they will continue to outdo themselves."

Last year's champion Patrick Reed presents Tiger Woods with his fifth green jacket after he won the Masters at Augusta National Golf Club on Sunday in Augusta, Ga.

Tiger Woods at the Masters: A TV ratings hit unlike any other

BY PHIL ROSENTHAL
Chicago Tribune

Midday at the Masters was a hit with TV viewers Sunday, leaving one to wonder what kind of audience Tiger Woods' resurrection would have drawn had weather not forced the final-round telecast to start at breakfast rather than after lunch.

Nationally, CBS's overnight Masters ratings in the nation's largest markets averaged a 7.7 household rating for Woods' first victory in a major in 11 years and first triumph at Augusta National since 2005.

That's the highest overnight rating for a morning golf telecast since metered ratings were introduced 34 years ago, the network said.

It also was the highest-rated golf telecast since last year's Masters, peaking with a 12.1 rating among the metered markets in the 1:15-1:30 p.m. quarter-hour.

In Chicago, the 8 a.m.-2 p.m. live telecast on CBS-2 averaged a 7.9 household rating.

The local audience peaked between 1:15 and 1:30, when 12.7 percent of the Chicago market's TV homes — or almost 413,000 households — tuned in.

That's a bump from last year's Masters coverage, which began at 1 p.m. and averaged a 7.0 household rating on CBS-2, peaking at 10.0.

One local industry observer, who requested anonymity for lack of authorization to discuss these numbers, said if the weather had not forced rescheduling, the average rating for Woods' victory likely would have been as high as 12.0, peaking with at least 20 percent of the market's TV homes.

Nationally, a repeat of the earlier presentation beginning at 2 p.m. averaged a 3.4 household rating in the metered markets.

CBS said that made the rerun the third-highest-rated golf broadcast on any network this year. Only Saturday's third-round Masters coverage and Sunday's original run of final-round coverage fared better.

Combined, the two Sunday showings of the Masters averaged 11.1 percent of the TV households in the nation's metered markets.

Kane to captain Team USA again

After the Blackhawks season ended, Patrick Kane said he needed a little time to decide if he wanted to play for the U.S. national team in this year's world championships.

Kane

He has made up his mind. Kane was named captain Monday for the second straight year and will try to lead Team USA to its first gold medal.

The tournament will be played May 10-16 in Slovakia.

Kane was named tournament MVP last year while helping Team USA win the bronze medal.
